Rockefeller Drug Law Changes 2015 Annual Report

The 2009 reforms to New York’s Rockefeller Drug Laws included a requirement to study the impact of these changes (see New York State Executive Law §837). The Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS) works with the Office of Court Administration (OCA), the Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse Services (OASAS), the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS), New York City agencies, district attorneys’ offices, and diversion programs to compile data and monitor the impact of these changes. This report details trends in arrests, indictments and superior court informations (SCIs), prison commitments, and screening and admission to felony drug court for felony drug and specified property offenses.¹ Other reports on this topic are posted to the DCJS website: www.criminaljustice.ny.gov.

Felony Drug Arrests, Indictments, and Commitments

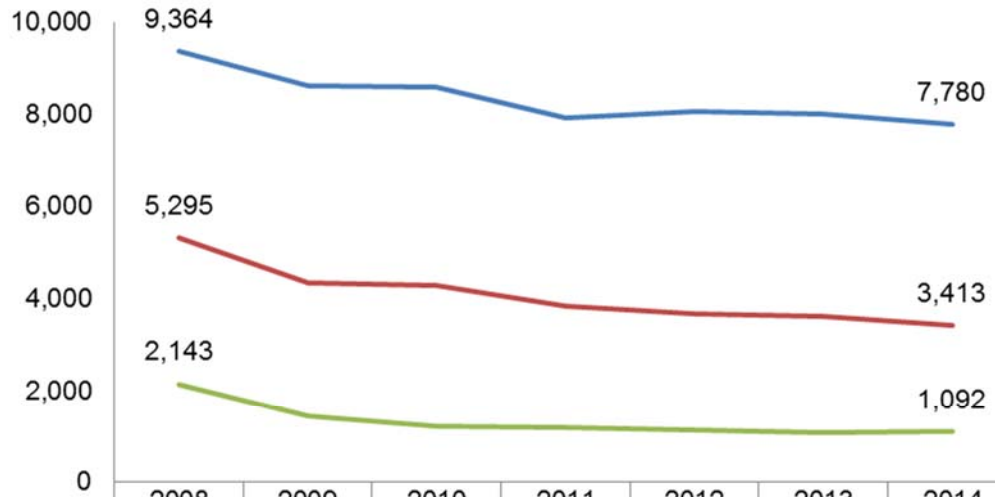

The charts below present trends in felony drug arrests, indictments and commitments across New York City, large counties outside of NYC, and small counties outside of NYC.² In New York City and large counties outside of NYC, felony drug arrests, indictments, and commitments decreased from 2009 to 2014. In small counties outside of NYC, felony drug arrests, indictments, and commitments have been increasing significantly since 2011.

¹ Eligible property offenses include: third-degree burglary, second- and third-degree criminal mischief, third- and fourth-degree grand larceny (excluding firearms), third- and fourth-degree criminal possession of stolen property (excluding firearms), second-degree forgery, second-degree criminal possession of a forged instrument, second-degree unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, and first-degree unlawfully using slugs.

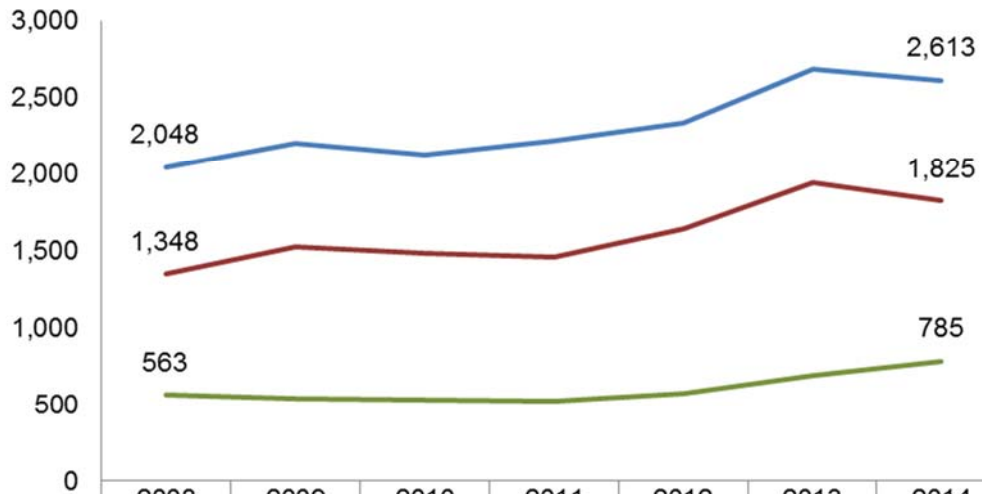

² Trends in felony drug and specified property arrests, indictments, and commitments, by county and year, are presented in Appendix A through Appendix F.

Drug Offenders Under Custody

The proportion of drug offenders under custody continues the decline that began prior to the enactment of the 2009 reforms. Over the past two decades, the decline in the total inmate population under custody is mostly attributable to the sustained decline in drug offenders under custody.

CPL Article 216: Judicial Diversion

The charts on Page 5 present screenings and admissions to felony drug court for A216-eligible drug and specified property offenses. In New York City and large counties outside of New York City, felony drug court screenings have generally declined since 2010, partly due to decreases in felony drug arrests. In large counties outside of New York City, screenings declined after the initial spike in 2010, but remained higher than the years before the drug law changes took effect. In small counties outside of New York City, felony drug court screenings increased from 2008 to 2014.

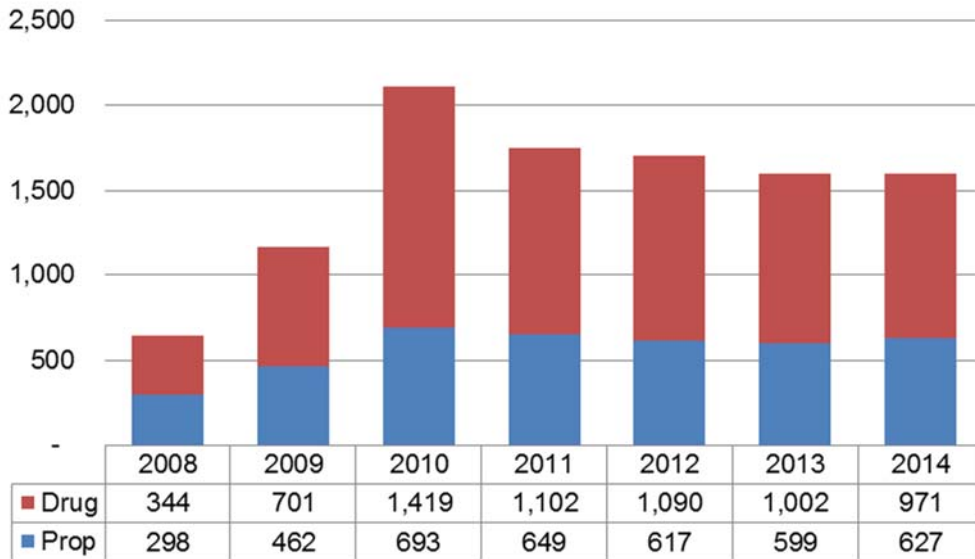

Felony drug court admissions follow a similar pattern. In New York City, admissions peaked in 2010 and declined through 2014. In large counties outside of New York City, admissions to felony drug court have remained higher than 2008 and 2009. In small counties outside of New York City, admissions have increased since 2008.

Felony drug court screenings and admissions for A216-eligible arrests, by county, are presented in Appendix G and Appendix H.
