2009 Drug Law Changes 2016 Annual Report

The 2009 reforms to New York’s Rockefeller Drug Laws included a requirement to study the impact of these changes (see New York State Executive Law §837). This report details trends in arrests, indictments and superior court informations (SCIs), prison commitments, and screening and admission to felony drug court for felony drug and specified property offenses.¹ Other reports on this topic are posted to the DCJS website: www.criminaljustice.ny.gov.

Felony Drug Arrests, Indictments, and Commitments

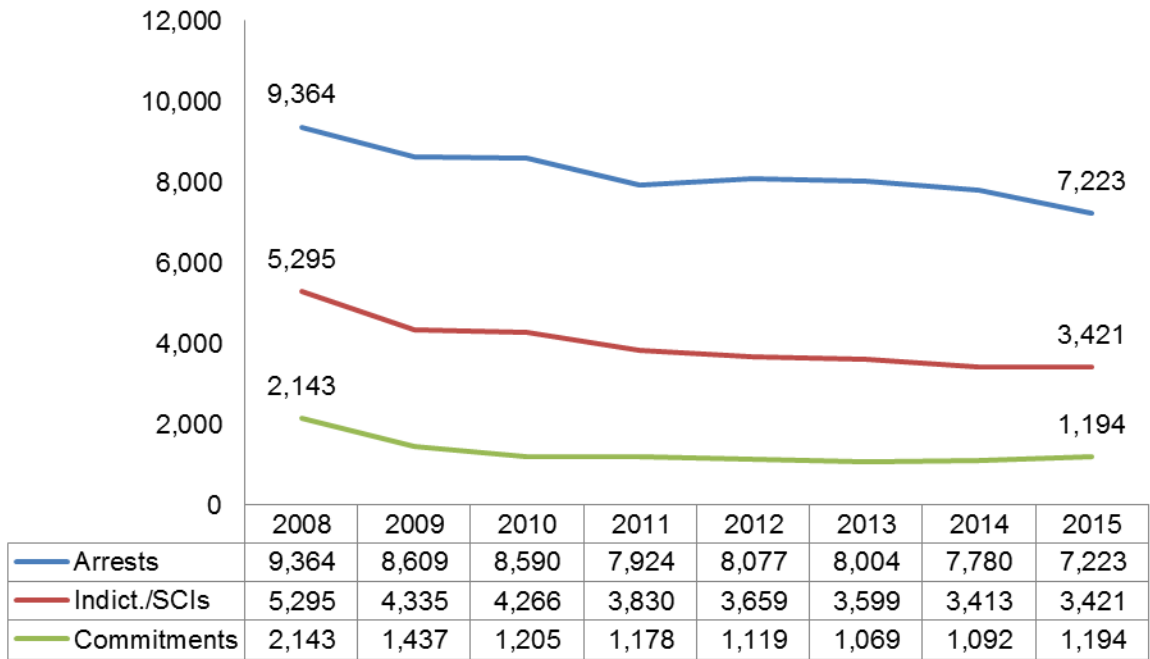

The charts below present trends in felony drug arrests, indictments, and commitments across New York City, large counties outside of NYC, and small counties outside of NYC.² In New York City, felony drug arrests, indictments, and commitments decreased dramatically from 2008 to 2015. In large counties outside of NYC, arrests decreased from 2008 to 2015. Indictments and commitments decreased from 2008 to 2014, then increased slightly in 2015. In small counties outside of NYC, felony drug arrests and indictments increased significantly between 2008 and 2014, then decreased in 2015. Commitments have been increasing steadily since 2011.

¹ Eligible property offenses include: third-degree burglary, second- and third-degree criminal mischief, third- and fourth-degree grand larceny (excluding firearms), third- and fourth-degree criminal possession of stolen property (excluding firearms), second-degree forgery, second-degree criminal possession of a forged instrument, second-degree unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, and first-degree unlawfully using slugs.

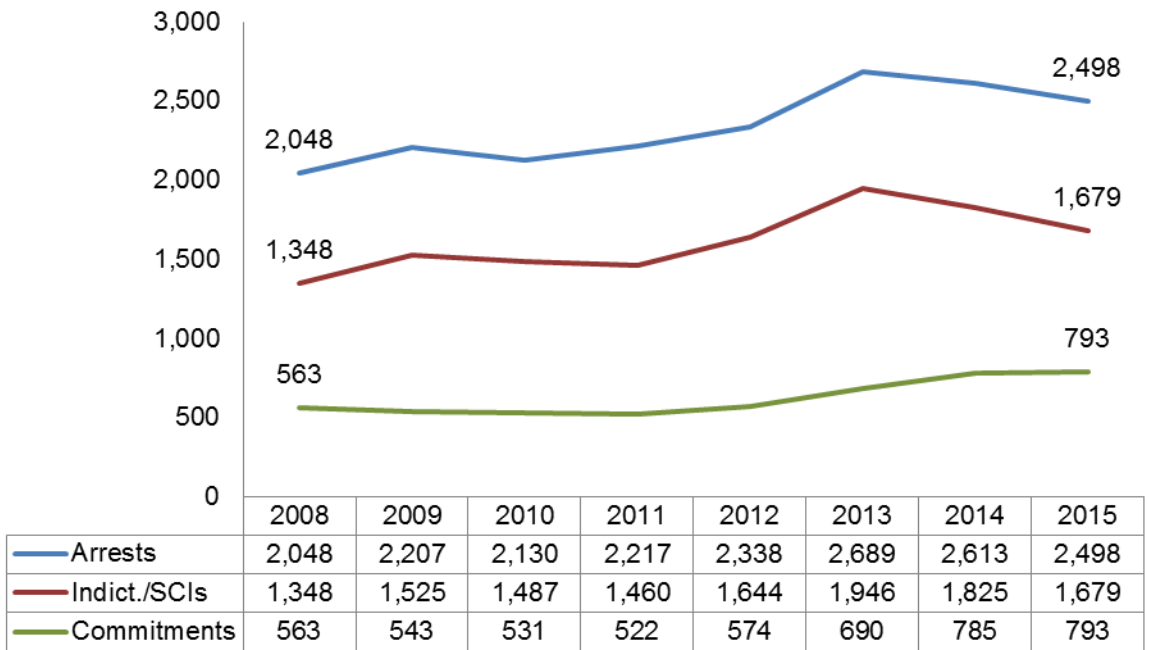

² Trends in felony drug and specified property arrests, indictments, and commitments, by county and year, are presented in Appendix A through Appendix F.

Drug Offenders Under Custody

Over the past two decades, the decline in the total inmate population under custody is mostly attributable to the decline in drug offenders under custody.

CPL Article 216: Judicial Diversion

The charts on Pages 5, 6, and 7 present screenings and admissions to felony drug court for A216-eligible drug and specified property offenses. In New York City, felony drug court screenings declined after 2010, due in part to decreases in felony drug arrests, and have hovered around 2,500 per year since 2012. Felony drug court admissions peaked in 2010 and declined through 2014, increasing again in 2015. In large counties outside of New York City, screenings declined after the initial spike in 2010, but continue to remain higher than 2008, the year before the drug law changes took effect. Admissions to felony drug court in these counties have continued to decline since 2010 but remain higher than 2008 as well. In small counties outside of New York City, felony drug court screenings peaked in 2012 and have been declining since then. Admissions increased from 2008 to 2014, then decreased slightly in 2015.

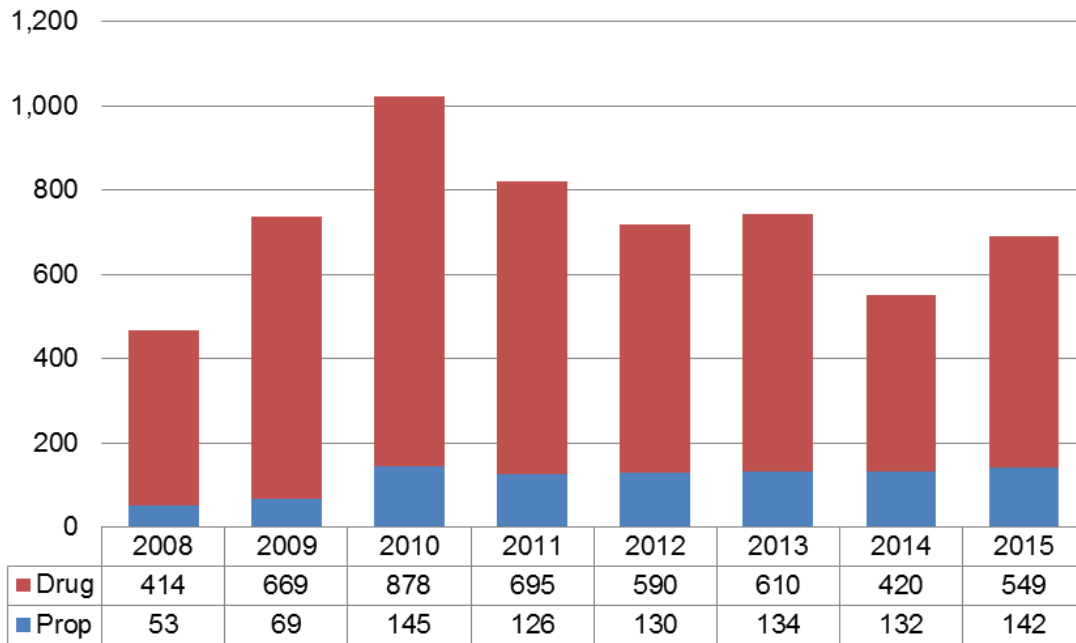

Felony drug court screenings and admissions for A216-eligible arrests, by county, are presented in Appendix G and Appendix H.
